Why Does it Matter?

- The disability community has the potential to become a powerful voting bloc- there were 35.4 million eligible voters with disabilities in 2016 (about 25% of the total electorate);
- Voting can protect the issues people with disabilities care about; especially at the state and local levels;
- A politically-engaged disability community can make elected officials think twice before they infringe on our rights, access, and choice to live in the community.
